Mike Aquino will be ASI's executive vice president

Brown likes Mike for VP Aquino echoes pledge of better communication

By Suzanne Moffatt
Daily Staff Writer

Waving and saying hello as friends passed by Tuesday, social science junior Mike Aquino confidently discussed his plans as next year's ASI Executive Vice President.

After less than a year on the Board of Directors, Aquino was approved by that same body as executive vice president for the 1994-95 school year at Wednesday's board meeting.

Aquino currently is serving as an interim board member for the College of Liberal Arts. He began his term in January after former director Mike Rockenstein graduated in December.

Aquino, 21, said he took the opportunity to fill the position because he wanted to get an understanding of ASI.

"I had done a lot of complaining about ASI, and this was my chance to see what was going on and to be a part of it," Aquino said.

President-elect Erica Brown based much of her campaign on the idea of improved communication between students

Poly grad, cafe owner Saro Rizzo launches council bid

By Kristina Van Saun
Daily Staff Writer

If political science graduate Saro Rizzo has his way, students may soon have a closer connection with the San Luis Obispo City Council.

Rizzo, 28, is one of the first candidates to file for the November City Council elections.

He says his link to Cal Poly — as a 1989 graduate — and his knowledge of the business community — which he learned in his position as owner of Cafe Roma's, a downtown, 35-year-old family restaurant — provide the right mix for a city representative.

Though Rizzo is a Cal Poly graduate and a 1992 University of Santa Clara Law School graduate, he said he doesn't plan to run a campaign targeting only students. However, he said he can't and won't deny their importance.

In 1992, then-political science senior Brent Petersen ran a tight race for the Council, and on election night seemed to be a mere 92 votes away from winning. When final

Congress bans violence against abortion clinics Bill makes threats illegal, raises free speech questions

By Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Congress answered a decade of bombings, arson and even a killing by sending President Clinton a bill Thursday banning blockades, violence and threats against abortion clinics.

"These are no longer peaceful protests," said Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., as the Senate approved the bill 69-30. "These are examples of vigilante extremism that mirror the spread of hate crimes and random violence in our society."

Clinton is certain to sign the legislation, which would take effect immediately. Fifty-two Democrats and 17 Republicans voted for it, while three Democrats and 27 Republicans voted no. The House approved the measure last week on a 241-174 roll call.

Supporters argued that over the last 10 years, the State high court will offer guidelines on homeless

By Bob Egelko
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The state Supreme Court took up the question of crackdowns on the homeless Thursday, granting Santa Ana's request to review a ruling overturning the city's "anti-camping" ordinance.

Chief Justice Malcolm Lucas and Justices Armand Arabian, Marvin Baxter and Ronald George provided the four-vote majority required to grant a hearing in the case, which could affect several California cities.

Santa Ana's ordinance, passed in October 1992, made it a crime to "live temporarily" in a tent or sleeping bag or under a blanket on public property.

Program forming to empower Poly women

By Cindy Utter
Daily Staff Writer

On a campus where men outnumber women at both the student and administrative levels, role models for female students are sometimes hard to find.

Recognizing the problem, the Center for Women and Ethnic Issues (CWEI) is developing a mentor program to offer support for the female students.

Education graduate student Charlotte Rinaldi is coordinating a mentor program for women that will begin fall quarter. CWEI is currently looking for 20 female students to participate in the pilot program.

Rinaldi, who is coordinating the program — said the mentor program is imperative.

"In management staff, there are over two times the number of men to women," Rinaldi said. Secretaries are the only category of employees that has more women than men, she added.

Rinaldi said having a mentor shows female students that women are successful and able to get good jobs. Some students, she added, are lacking a basic support system that the mentor program could provide.

She said having a mentor also helps a student academically. She said faculty usually focus on education, and often don't meet students' personal needs. As a result, she said the student can feel detached from the entire university.

"The mentor program allows a way for the faculty to get involved personally with the students, and for the students to actually get to know faculty and staff members," she said.

A strong support system at all levels of the university would be especially beneficial for women and students of underrepresented groups, she said, because those groups often lack support.

Project will salvage ecology of Yosemite's Mirror Lake

Associated Press

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK — Yosemite National Park officials on Thursday announced a project to restore the park's Mirror Lake, which has been overrun by trampling and millions of visitors.

Park officials hope the project will protect the natural evolution of the lake, which is developing into a meadow. Chevron Corp. will pay $200,000 for the restoration and supply 500 of its employees to volunteer to work on the project.

More than 100 acres around Mirror Lake and the Tenaya Canyon area will be restored and protected, which will include the dismantling of the Mirror Lake

Dam. The dam, which is no longer used, was built to deepen the water and enhance the mirror effect.

New signs and landscaping will keep visitors from riding bicycles through the marshy part of the lake.

"This is not an attempt to turn Mirror Lake back into a lake," said Bob Hansen, executive director of the Yosemite Fund, a non-profit group that works with the National Park Service to solicit private funds for the park.

"It will allow the natural process of siltation and the gradual movement of lake to marsh, to meadow and ultimately to forest to take place without the area becoming an overrun blight."

HOMELESS: Ruling affects entire state

—paigns, the 4th District Court of Appeal ruled the ordinance unconstitutional this February, describing it as "punishment for poverty." The court said the measure penalized the homeless because of their status, violated the right to travel and was overly vague.

The ruling, denounced by a lawyer for Santa Ana as "social engineering," was the first of its kind in California. It followed a similar recent decision by a federal judge in Miami.

But the court's reasoning was rejected in March by a federal judge in San Francisco, who said he was not persuaded that homelessness was a "status" entitled to constitutional protection. U.S. District Judge D. Lowell Jensen refused to block enforcement of San Francisco's Matrix program, under which many homeless people have been arrested for blocking sidewalks and camping or sleeping overnight in parks.

Santa Ana's 1992 ordinance prohibited camping — defined to include sleeping in a sleeping bag or beneath a blanket — on all public property. After enforcement was blocked by the appeals court last year, the city passed a narrower ordinance, still in effect, which prohibits camping only in Civic Center Plaza.

In its February ruling, the appeals court said Santa Ana has an average homeless population of 3,000, with 330 beds available in shelters and 125 during the winter in a National Guard armory. Under those conditions, the court said, the 1992 ordinance effectively made it a crime to be homeless.

"The city may preclude the erection of structures in public places and it might ban 'camping' in select locations with a properly drafted ordinance, but it may not preclude people who have no place to go from simply living in Santa Ana," said Justice Thomas Crosby.

Nation's economy looking positive

Analysis of recent indicators soothes market worries

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Falling energy and food prices made wholesale inflation disappear altogether last month while two other reports showed the economy's rapid-fire growth moderating. The reports — described as a "dose of economic Valium" — helped calm nervous financial markets.

The Labor Department said Thursday its Producer Price Index, which measures inflation before it reaches consumers, actually fell for the first time this year, edging down 0.1 percent in April after having risen 0.2 percent in March.

The April performance was helped by declines in the cost of fruits and vegetables, home heating oil and tobacco.

In another report, the government said that retail sales fell 0.8 percent in April, helping to relieve fears that consumer spending was growing at such a torrid pace that it would trigger further inflationary pressures.

And in a third report, the government said that the number of newly laid off workers increased by 26,000 last month to the highest weekly level since late January as layoffs in corporate America continued to take a toll.

Wall Street, which had been rattled by unexpectedly strong economic activity that raised fears of inflation, rallied on the reports showing inflation remaining well contained and economic activity slowing from its torrid pace of late last year.

The Dow Jones industrial average was up more than 18 points in late afternoon trading, fueled by a rally in the bond market that pushed yields on 30-year Treasury bonds down to 7.57 percent.

The rise in long-term interest rates so far this year has already begun to pinch the housing market. The Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. reported Thursday that 30-year mortgage rates hit 8.77 percent this week, the highest level in two years.

Automakers warn state board to rethink electric cars by '98

By June E. Allen
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — American and Japanese automakers said Thursday that it may be impossible to build an electric car that consumers would want by California's 1998 deadline.

Auto company executives testified as the California Air Resources Board began its review of clean air rules that would be the nation's toughest, requiring the production of zero-emission vehicles by 1998.

Carmakers said they were skeptical that batteries will be strong enough to give a car the range, speed and amenities that California drivers want.

"We must have a battery breakthrough," said Peter Pestillo, Ford's director of corporate relations. "The ultimate test ... has to be consumer acceptance."

Yoshitomo Shito, general manager of the technical department for the Japan Automobile Manufacturers Association, said an efficient electric car could not be produced so quickly.

"Forcing the technology by 1998 will be counterproductive," he said.

For carmakers the two-day hearing offered the last chance to make a case for delays in getting cars to market. But one board member said there was little chance the panel would alter the timetable.

RIZZO: Poly grad has a taste for council seat tallies were completed, however, Councilmember Dave Romero won the seat.

But Petersen marked an important change in campus politics. Formed specifically for the purpose of promoting a student candidate for Council, Poly-scope nearly completed its mission.

Rizzo said he didn't know Petersen, but understands the challenges a younger man faces in San Luis Obispo politics. Rizzo said he believes the city tends to take students for granted.

"Definitely being younger than most candidates is going to be hard," he said.

Crop science freshman Julia Berry, who is working for Rizzo's campaign, said she's enthusiastic about helping Rizzo win the student vote.

"I'd like to get an on-campus group to spread the word," she said. "I think Cal Poly is a good area to start because there are a lot of active people who are interested in the things around them. They will be interested in what (Rizzo) wants to do."

Rizzo already has earned a few on-campus fans. Business Dean Allen Haile said he knows Rizzo as a family friend and someone who gives him legal advice from time to time.

Haile said he believes Rizzo is in touch with students and understands the need students have for a strong economy.

"What's most important at Cal Poly is that our students depend on an expanding economy," Haile said.

Political science professor John Culver said he believes Rizzo has a "good head for politics" and is a good candidate for City Council.

"He has several parts that make him an interesting candidate," Culver said. "For one, he is a former student and he has an orientation to student concerns here that a lot of students wouldn't have. Also, he's a law school graduate, a local business owner and he brings a different perspective."

Culver said Rizzo must understand that his age could be prove a difficult obstacle.

"He should be well-received if people listen to him," Culver said. "But his age will tend to work against him. I think that fact that he's a law school graduate and a business owner may placate those who would otherwise see him only as a young or student candidate."

Though he intends to reach Cal Poly students during his campaign, Rizzo said he is concerned with relaying his desire to help all parts of the city, especially senior citizens and young business owners.

To do that, Rizzo said he wants to get the city more involved in joint projects with students at Cal Poly. He said such projects would develop skill and experience for students and would provide "fresh talent" to benefit businesses.

Right now, Rizzo says, San Luis Obispo is torn between many separate ideas and needs to be brought together with joint project and other pro-student, pro-business ideas.

"Anybody who goes to a City Council meeting or reads the newspaper or listens to one of the (local) talk shows, the feeling they get is that it's a divided city," Rizzo said.

To help bring the community together, Rizzo said he also plans to transform San Luis Obispo into a high-tech area, creating more quality jobs for graduates, while still protecting the city's good qualities.

"I think we can perpetuate that," Rizzo said.

Rizzo said people tend to be apprehensive about change and are afraid the town will lose its charm.

"I think people are naturally afraid because they don't want to give up or lose the qualities they love about San Luis Obispo," Rizzo said.

Expanding into higher technological systems in business, Rizzo added, is the what San Luis Obispo needs.

AQUINO: New vice president vows to better ASI's ties with students and ASI and also within the corporation itself. Aquino said it was that aspect of Brown's campaign promises that encouraged him to get involved with the ASI executive staff.

"There's still so many things that go on students need to know about," he said.

"The one thing I really believe in with Erica is her desire to implement better communication ties," he added.

Brown said she chose Aquino because of his ability to work with people and to get problems solved.

"He sees a problem and he tries to solve it — and he does it well," Brown said. "He's someone who is critical and can look at ASI objectively."

Aquino and Brown have known each other for about three years through mutual friends.

"It seems like I've always known Mike, but it's been on an observational level," Brown said.

Brown said she wants to see Aquino get involved with numerous aspects of ASI next year.

"I plan to use the vice president as more than a figurehead," she said. "I want him to be in-involved with homecoming and Open House. Budget is also a highly intense matter."

In the coming year, Aquino and Brown both said they want to see the student body better represented — which includes seeing that students have a stronger voice.

"Erica and I have both talked about having the executive staff going out to clubs and soliciting needs and opinions from the students," Aquino said. "We need to strengthen the ties of the Board of Directors and the students."

Donn Casale, a representative from the College of Liberal Arts, said he thinks Aquino will do a good job as vice president.

"He's got a good head on him," he said. "He wants to do a lot of things."

Casale also said Aquino immediately got involved as a board member.

"He took an active role on the council, and he's always been concerned," Casale said. "Out of all of (the Liberal Arts representatives), he's the one who really brings the information to the council."

Aquino serves on two committees this year — Elections Committee and Special Projects.

He currently is working on a resolution to define performance standards and accountability of board members. He said he thinks the resolution is an important step because dissemination of information "begins with the (college) councils and the Board."

Aquino said he is looking forward to more interaction with the student body.

"I'm really looking at taking a hold of my opportunities to go out into the student population and get a needs analysis and at least make an effort to ask questions," he said.

Wrong place, wrong time

Legislators' huge raise has no place in debt-mired California

From the Sacramento Bee

With the state of California facing a $5 billion deficit, its economy still mired in recession and unemployment intolerably high, this is not the time to give legislators a 37 percent pay increase.

But that's what the seven-member California Citizens Compensation Commission has done. Appointed by Gov. Pete Wilson and former Gov. George Deukmejian, the commission has made California lawmakers the highest paid in the country. It also makes them an easy target for every radio talk show host in the state. With such friends, the Legislature doesn't need Rush Limbaugh.

As is the case in any job, some legislators are talented and hardworking — worth what the commission has said they should be paid, and more — and some are not. The job requires long hours and weekends. Most legislators have to maintain two homes. Political life is draining on them and their families. A salary increase was justified — particularly since voters recently eliminated legislative pensions — but not one this big.

Because voters capped the Legislature's budget when they voted for term limits, lawmaker pay increases will have to be taken from other expenses, most likely by cutting the number or salaries of legislative staff. That's bad news too. Inexperienced, term-limited legislators depend on staff for expertise. Many talented public policy experts have already left the Legislature. More will be forced out if salaries are cut.

When voters approved creation of the commission in 1990, it was seen as a reform, a way to move the difficult issue of legislative compensation out of the hands of self-interested lawmakers and to transfer it to an independent body that would not be influenced by politics. But no one wanted it to be so out of touch.

State can't afford generosity of raises during financial crisis

From the San Francisco Chronicle

If only the members of the Legislature could clear up the state's financial problems as readily as they solved their own, what a prosperous place California would be!

Thanks to their foresight four years ago, the legislators were able to pass over the responsibility for setting their pay to an independent commission — with the result that they will get a 37 percent pay raise late this year, which is surely more than they would have dared to vote for themselves.

As the California Citizens Compensation Commission contended, some arguments can be offered on behalf of higher pay for state officials.

But generous pay raises must be awarded only when the state can afford them.

If the Legislature is going to accept an unpopular pay raise, its members should at least be required to stand up and be counted, so that members of the public can respond appropriately.

Commentary sounded self-serving

Re: "Religious fanatics: Shut the hell up," Opinion, May 10

A little touchy, are we?

Yet you, of all people, should know about our country's policy on freedom of speech. It means that we are open to talk about whatever we want. If foul language, songs of rape and cop killing and other demeaning dribble should be accepted, then so should open discussions of religion and relative subjects.

Christians (and, I assume, other religious "fanatics") don't tie people down and force them to listen, and I assume this didn't happen to you.

My advice to you is to either come up with some logical criticism of our beliefs, so we may discuss them rationally, or simply don't listen.

Your writing was very emotional and void of logic. This could perhaps suggest that you are confronting some issues in your own life.

Take, for instance, the issues of sin and morality which you so openly abhor. Where does this stuff come from? Is not a sense of right and wrong instilled in each of us? This runs contrary to the processes of natural selection and evolution. Do you have any conscience at all? Of course you do. Even the worst criminals have a conscience. They're just better at ignoring it.

So aside from humans evolving a conscience (which is opposite of survival of the fittest, as it would be better to eat your neighbor than love your neighbor), I ask again — where does right and wrong come from? Might I suggest that the Almighty Creator planted these ideas in us for a reason. I thank Him for it, as it keeps me from destroying my life on a daily basis.

Andy, I'm trying to understand your article and the motivation behind it. Is it because you feel threatened — that your self-serving lifestyle needs to be defended? This is all I can conclude from what you presented.

Know this: That all men serve a god — be it knowledge, power, money, etc. Yours is named Andy Price.

Let me give you (and all those out there) who wish to destroy Christians like myself a little hint at how to do it.

Prove the Bible invalid. This is the rock on which we stand. We believe it is the infallible word of God. If you could show it to have internal contradictions, false facts or false prophecies, then you would surely destroy us.

(Remember, doing this accurately will involve the use of Hebrew and Greek to accurately understand exactly what the Bible is saying.)

If you would like to talk, please call me at 481-3143. I appreciate those of you who question things such as these. There's much more to life than the subjects taught at school.

Price might want to relocate

Your blood pressure apparently rises in the presence of Christians. I am sorry that you were offended by a recent minister's approach to evangelism. As a follower of Jesus, we are called by him to spread the message of the gospel, not with hate in our hearts, but rather with love. Because it is God's love that compelled him to make a way of salvation through Christ Jesus on our behalf.

I am not sure why you hate Christians so much, nor why you stereotype all Christians as unthinking, non-reasoning fanatics. C.S. Lewis and Josh McDowell are just two names I can think of who — through intellectual reasoning and study of the scriptures — came to know the only true God. I believe these two men were devout Atheists before they became Christians.

Have you traveled much around the world? It is my belief that our nation is one of the wealthiest and most blessed nations on Earth because of our Judeo-Christian heritage.

Granted, many terrible things have happened in the name of Christianity, and our nation's history is not blameless, yet what is it about the United States of America that draws so many people to our land?

Could it be that we have acknowledged our Creator in our history? For example, "In God we trust" is written on every bank note in this country. Why aren't people emigrating to communist countries? Perhaps you ought to go and live in a nation whose heritage is not based on democratic and Judeo-Christian principles and see how you like it?

The Christian message is one of hope for all men and women. Moral values such as "thou shalt not murder" and "thou shalt not steal" are not "archaic, outdated values." I hope you will rethink some of your ideas.

Letters which adhere to the Daily's policies and address timely issues typically receive priority.

Accused kidnapper chose victim at random

Davis denies charges of sexual abuse

By Dara Akiko Tom
Associated Press

SANTA ROSA — Richard Allen Davis, accused of kidnapping and killing Polly Klaas, told police he didn't sexually abuse the 12-year-old and that he strangled her to cover his tracks, a police sergeant testified Thursday.

Davis, clad in dark pants and long-sleeved shirt, displayed no emotion as Petaluma Sgt. Michael Meese released, for the first time, details of a confession by Davis.

He testified in the third day of Davis' preliminary hearing in Sonoma County Municipal Court. Judge Robert Dale will announce on Friday whether he has heard sufficient evidence to order Davis to stand trial.

Davis told police he chose Polly at random on the night of Oct. 1, 1993, Meese testified. Davis said he had smoked some marijuana, which may have been laced with other drugs, and drank a few beers before going to Polly's modest home in Petaluma, a small town about 35 miles north of San Francisco.

Meese said he asked Davis whether he raped Polly, and Davis answered: "As much as I remember, I don't think I did."

The pathologist who performed an autopsy testified earlier that Polly's body was so badly decomposed he couldn't find signs of sexual assault.

CLINICS

protests have gotten out of hand. By one count, there were more than 1,000 violent acts at abortion clinics between 1977 and April 1993, including 36 bombings, 81 cases of arson, 131 death threats, 84 assaults, two kidnappings — and the killing of Dr. David Gunn in Florida.

Opponents countered that such violent acts are rare and are already crimes. This legislation, they said, is an attempt by liberals to thwart just one side in the emotional debate over abortion. They noted that there are no similar federal constraints against protests involving labor unions, environmentalists or animal rights supporters.

"What this bill does is aim the full force of the federal criminal system against a class of Americans who feel passionately about one of the key moral questions of our time," said Sen. Don Nickles, R-Okla.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said the bill clamped unconstitutional restrictions on the free speech rights of anti-abortion protesters, constraints that the government has not before invoked.

"If states in the 1950s and 60s had been able to impose and uphold such severe penalties on civil disobedience, the civil rights movement might well have been snuffed out in its infancy," Hatch said.

But supporters said the legislation was aimed not at speech, but at the physical force and intimidation that some protesters have aimed at women using clinics and the people who work there.

"Clinics continue to be under siege," said Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass. "The health care providers who work there continue to be in fear for their lives."

MENTORING: Slanted statistics in staff, faculty spark advocacy effort

According to a report from Institutional Studies, men outnumber women on campus 58 percent to 42 percent.

Felicia Lee, interim coordinator for the Center for Women and Ethnic Issues, originated the idea of a mentor program at Cal Poly.

Lee said men have the old boy network — a camaraderie to help each other in their careers. But she said women are not encouraged enough to pursue professional careers.

The purpose of the mentor program, she said, is for women to "hook each other up," and learn from the wisdom of those who have achieved successful careers.

Lee formerly assisted with a mentor program for women and minorities at Colorado State University. She also remembers a time when she was an undergraduate and having a mentor helped her out.

"I didn't know what to do after graduation," she said. "My mentor told me to go into Student Affairs."

She had never thought of going into Student Affairs for a career until her mentor gave her the suggestion.

"Her advice helped me get into graduate school," Lee said.

Later, Lee said her mentor gave her a recommendation which helped her obtain job interviews. Her mentor also gave her a focus for her career that saved her a lot of time and headaches in the long run, she said.

She said her mentor became a "lifelong friend."

"I still call her frequently," Lee said.

Lee's positive experience with her mentor has inspired her to become a mentor for a Cal Poly student. She said she feels it is good to share what she has learned with others.

"(Women role models on campus) get overloaded from people going to them a lot for advice — particularly the female instructors, as there are not a great many of them. Mentors are someone you can go to outside of the formal structure. If you don't want to talk to a professor and you have a problem, you'll have someone to talk to."

Pat Harris
Staff Council chair

"You feel compelled to do it," she said.

Patricia Harris, chair of the Staff Council and a buyer in the Purchasing Department, also wants to be a mentor. She already is an adviser to the mentor program.

She said she perceives a need for a mentor program on campus. It teaches women the ropes, she said, and has been a successful tool in business and industry.

She said some women on campus already act in a mentor role.

"But they get overloaded from people going to them a lot for advice — particularly the female instructors, as there are not a great many of them," Harris said. "Mentors are someone you can go to outside of the formal structure. If you don't want to talk to a professor and you have a problem, you'll have someone to talk to."

Suzanne Fritz, leadership development specialist in Residential Life and Education, said mentees — those receiving advice — get as much out of a relationship with a mentor as they put into it.

Fritz, who also wants to be a mentor, said mentors can help students by giving them advice on how to balance career and family life.

"It's important for both men and women to have an opportunity to have mentors in their field or guidance through the educational process," she said.

Students must fill out applications for a mentor at the CWEI office. Rinaldi said she personally will match the student applicants with the faculty members who best suit their needs.

"Students can request a mentor from a certain ethnicity," she said. "Also, they can request certain characteristics in a mentor."

Mentors and mentees will decide when and where to meet, she said, and they will be required to meet a certain number of times.

CWEI will evaluate the mentor/mentee relationships three or four times during the quarter to make sure both members are satisfied with the arrangement, Rinaldi said.

"There will be more commitment asked of the students," she said.

For example, the students will be required to attend two of three workshops on assertiveness training, goal setting and team building, in addition to meeting with a mentor, she said.

The prospects of finding mentors looks good. So far, 30 faculty and staff members have signed up to be mentors, Rinaldi said.

Lee agreed. All of the mentors are volunteers, she said.

"The cost of the mentor program to the Center is minimal," she said.

If the pilot program is successful in fall, Lee said CWEI will make more funds available to expand the program.

Confusing? So is Cal Poly's playoff chances. In the easiest scenario, the Mustangs need a sweep over Cal State Los Angeles this weekend and need Cal State Dominguez Hills to lose at least one more / Daily photo by Scott Robinson

Baseball needs sweep, help

By Tim Vincent
Daily Staff Writer

It's all or nothing as the Cal Poly baseball team enters its final California Collegiate Athletic Association series ever.

The Mustangs (29-20, 16-11 CCAA) must sweep Cal State Los Angeles Saturday and Sunday to have a shot at the CCAA title. A sweep, coupled with at least two wins by Cal Poly Pomona (29-23-1, 14-13) over conference leader Cal State Dominguez Hills (35-16, 17-10), would give the Mustangs their fourth consecutive CCAA crown and an automatic playoff berth.

The Mustangs take on Los Angeles (22-31, 15-12 CCAA) Saturday at 7:30 p.m. at Sinsheimer Park and return for a Sunday doubleheader starting at 11 a.m.

Cal Poly's other chance at a playoff berth comes down to two scenarios.

Scenario No. 1: A Cal Poly sweep over Los Angeles places the Mustangs one game ahead of UC-Riverside in the CCAA final standings. If Dominguez Hills wins two of three from Pomona, the Mustangs and Toros share the conference title. But Dominguez Hills would get the automatic playoff berth given to the winner of the CCAA because they own a 4-2 edge over Cal Poly in head-to-head competition. A share of the title would not necessarily give the Mustangs a playoff berth, but it would put them in contention for the West Region's at-large playoff spot given to the second best team in either the CCAA or the Northern California Athletic Conference.

Scenario No. 2: A Pomona sweep over Dominguez Hills combined with the Mustangs winning two of three from Los Angeles would give the Mustangs a share of the CCAA title along with Riverside. The Highlanders would claim the conference's automatic playoff berth, having defeated the Mustangs, four of six games. Cal Poly would then be eligible for but not guaranteed the at-large playoff berth.

both sides of the ball.

"He's a little unorthodox," Eppright said.

Ollivier explained this method allows him to be quick at the net and especially powerful in returning fast serves.

He said it would take too much effort to change, and he doesn't recommend anybody else take up this way of playing.

"It limits your reach and just makes for an awkward game all-around," Ollivier said. "So, if I had a choice, I would rather have one hand on both sides, but since I started playing like that at 14, there's no reason to drastically change my game."

As for a future in tennis, Ollivier does not want to play professionally. He says he is not completely sure of what his long-term goals are after college, but he plans on attaining some type of career in technical communications.

"I can see myself playing with a beer in my hand at some country club with players who are B-level or C-level and just laughing about it," Ollivier joked.

AP Quick Roundup

CHICAGO — Defense. Defense. The Chicago Bulls got double doses of it from the New York Knicks, especially in the fourth quarter. Now the Bulls come home, their status as defending NBA champion shaky, trailing 2-0.

NEW YORK — Following the New York Rangers' second-round series victory over the Washington Capitals, Esa Tikkanen allowed himself the luxury of a boast. It's something the Rangers haven't been able to do in a long time as they continue on the road to an elusive Stanley Cup.

NEW YORK — The head U.S. World Cup official says he's given up attempts to convince authorities not to have fences around the field at Washington at Stanford for World Cup games. He's not giving up on the issue in Dallas, though.

Big Al, whose brother Bobby won Indy three times and whose son Al Jr. won it in 1992, has seen enormous changes since he first arrived at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway in 1965.

"When I first came here, I qualified at 154," he said. "Now, at 154 they don't even list you on the board."

Unser, who is driving a 1993 Lola-Ford Cosworth, is far off the pace so far this month with a fast lap of 214.613 mph since practice began on Sunday. That speed would have been 3 mph short of making the 33-car field at Indy last year, and it is well under the top speeds posted this week.

If he can get qualified sometime during the four days of time trials — Saturday and Sunday this weekend and next — then Unser will be right in his element.

Track says goodbye to CCAA from its backyard

By Lori Witmer
Daily Staff Writer

The Cal Poly track and field team is tightening up its laces in anticipation of its final showing in the California Collegiate Athletic Association Championships today and Saturday.

Track and Field Co-Director Brooks Johnson said he felt the team would be ready to compete.

"If you're having the championships at your own school and have to be psyched up about it," Johnson said.

Despite the fact there are more administrative duties coaches must assume, Johnson said, the support of friends and families of the athletes could play a big role in the team's success.

Cal Poly will compete against such foes as Cal State Bakersfield, Cal Poly Pomona, UC-San Diego, UC-Riverside and Cal State Los Angeles.

The Mustangs have become quite familiar with Cal State Los Angeles, having faced them four times this year. According to Johnson, the Golden Eagles will be Cal Poly's toughest competition.

"Both of our men's and women's teams are very close with about ten points separating them," Johnson said. "It will be a very tight meet and could come down to one of the last competitions."

This is the first time Cal Poly has hosted the championships since any of the Mustangs can remember.

"We've been having meetings so there is no confusion, and so we know exactly what to do," said freshman thrower Kaaren Sorensen. "We're just getting in the very competitive mode."

Since the Mustangs have hosted other meets this year, the team is pretty relaxed, said junior triple-jumper Andrew Hill.

"Coach Johnson is just telling us to be consistent with our performances," Hill said. "And for the people who are on the borderline (of qualifying for Nationals), he's telling them to step it up."

HILL: Jumper soars into Nationals

the Central Coast and has still come out ahead," he said. "He has that capacity."

"He is rock solid," he added.
Hill said he has been interested in sports since he was 6 years old. He was a standout in football, basketball and track at St. Mary's High School, where he holds school triple jump record with a leap of 47-6.

Hill said his grandfather, an avid track fan and former track official at Stanford University, piqued his interest in the sport.

"When I was young, I would go and watch," he said.

He also attributed his inspiration to his high school track and field coach, a former triple jumper.

"He was a really big influence. He taught me everything," Hill said.

But it is his father who deserves the most credit, he said.

"My dad has been the main focus of everything," he said. "He has been very supportive."

"He's been a driving force, both him and my mom. They've been to a lot of my meets."

Hill said he practices three hours a day, four days a week. And although he has a busy schedule he still finds time to study, he said.

"I've been an athlete all my life. It makes me budget my time," he said. "The time I do have, I have to focus on school."

After graduating, Hill said he wants to continue with triple jumping.

"I still want to compete. That is a goal of mine," he said. "In order to achieve that, I have to vastly improve."

Unser ignores age, tries for 28th Indy 500 start

By Mike Harris
Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Age is a variable in driving a race car that Al Unser simply chooses to ignore.

The four-time winner of the Indianapolis 500 will turn 55 on race day, May 29. He is nine months older than Mario Andretti, who is conducting his retirement tour this season.

But Unser, hoping to qualify for his 28th Indy start when time trials begin Saturday, says retirement is something he doesn't dwell upon.

"All of us know sometime or another, you have to back down," said Unser, who won at Indy in 1970, 1971, 1978 and 1987. "I'm not ready yet."

"Mario and I were the same when we were younger. We'd look at the guys up ahead of us with the age and laugh at them and say, 'What are those guys doing up here? They're too old to run.' And all of a sudden, here we are. I never did think that I would be this far along in age. ... Somebody once (said to) me, 'If you didn't know age, how old would you be?' It still doesn't bother me."

"I still feel that I have the desire, and I have the wanting to do it. The day that I finally wake up and say it's not fun anymore, or I'm not competitive, then you step down."

Unser, who has not had a full-time ride since 1985 and ran only one race last year — finishing 12th at Indy — added, "It has to happen pretty soon. You take 30 years ago if you had asked me if I'd last this long I'd have laughed at you. I still enjoy it, so here I am."

In the last two weeks, agribusiness junior Andrew Hill has had much more to celebrate than his 21st birthday.

At the first California/Nevada Track and Field Championship, hosted by UCLA April 30, Hill out-sprang all others in the triple jump.

His leap of 50-4.5 not only earned him first place, but also qualified him for the NCAA Nationals, held May 28 and 29 in Raleigh, N.C.

The favorable conditions at UCLA were a positive factor in his jump, Hill said.

"It was a good day. The conditions were good and the atmosphere was good," he said. "The runway was nice and the wind was behind our backs."

Although his UCLA jump was a personal best, Hill said there is still room for improvement.

"A lot has to do with the coaching. I really enjoy the event, so I am always trying to get better," he said. "I love what I do, so it makes it easier to improve."

Hill said he hopes to surpass his NCAA Nationals performance from last year — a 49-2.5 jump which landed him eighth.

Track and Field Co-Director Brooks Johnson said he is proud of Hill's accomplishments.

"With his attitude and dedication, I'm sure he will improve," he said. "He is a very strong competitor. Competition brings out the best in him."

Johnson said this year is the first that Hill has competed as a full-time triple jumper. He said that alone is a factor in Hill's strong performance.

Ollivier looks to double-fist 4th award

Ask any tennis player what his or her ideal weapon of choice would be and most would point to the latest and greatest graphite wonder which technology can produce and money can buy.

That wouldn't apply to Marc Ollivier, though. The 22-year-old English senior and Cal Poly's No. 1 tennis player knows all too well what his weapon of choice is — attitude.

It is his attitude on the court and his refusal to display excessive emotion that are his major assets, he said.

Head Coach Chris Eppright agrees. He counts Ollivier's attitude as one of the main reasons why he will probably become one of the few Mustang tennis players to receive All-American honors four years in a row.

"Mentally, he's strong," Eppright said. "He doesn't show a lot of emotion."

"He's as much a competitor as any athlete in any program (at Cal Poly)," he said.

Specifically, it's Ollivier's combination of a good serve and solid return which made him tough to beat this year. He heads into Nationals in Kansas City, Mo., starting Friday with a record of 21-10.

Most of Ollivier's losses came from Division I opponents. He only dropped three matches to California Collegiate Athletic Association opponents — two were against Cal Poly Pomona's Jauffrey Faustini, who was the CCAA Player of the Year.

Despite his three losses to CCAA foes, he managed to lead the Mustangs to their sixth consecutive CCAA crown with 5-0 mark and 12-4 overall.

Ollivier said whether he likes it or not, he has always had the role of being the first person to drop the hatchet on someone's neck if needed.

But Ollivier's doubles partner Rafael Huerta said the only senior on the team is a fun guy to hang around with. Huerta, a political science freshman, has known Ollivier for over a year and has been his doubles partner since winter.

"He's a really cool guy," Huerta said. "Every time we go out, he'll call the team and see what everybody else is doing."

Huerta added he has enjoyed playing with someone as smart and experienced as Ollivier.

The San Clemente native began playing when he was 9. At 13, he was playing in tournaments. Ollivier said it was in high school when he started getting serious about tennis.

It was also in high school when Ollivier began stroking the ball with a style that is rare in competitive tennis.
